VOLUME 26; NUMBER 34

LOCAL MERCHANTS SELECT OFFICERS

The members of the Daly City Merchants' Association met at the City Hall last Wednesday evening, a large number being present, and three new members, Horace Fellows, R. T. McHale and Ed Byrne, being added to the roll.

The principal business of the evening was the nomination of new officers, to serve during the coming year. The officers nominated by the members were: Andrew Vireno, president; Peter Pavlos, vice-president; W. H. Clay, recording secretary; John J. Fahey, secretary-treasurer; and J. Plansky, sergeant-at-arms.

The nominees will undoubtedly be chosen as the officers of the Daly City Merchants' Association, and will look after the affairs of the association for the next year.

It was also decided at this meeting to change the regular meeting place of the association from the City Hall to the Eagles' Hall, 6276 Mission street.

MOTORIST FATALLY INJURED IN COLLISION

Last Saturday night Peter Stockan, of Knowles avenue, was struck by a street car while driving his automobile and was fatally injured. The injured man was taken to the South San Francisco hospital and was later removed to the Community hospital, at Beresford, where he passed away last Tuesday.

Stockan was a native of Scotland, and was a contractor and builder. Mrs. Camelia Stockan, his wife, has been in the Community hospital for many months, suffering from tuberculosis. She was released from the hospital long enough to attend the funeral services. Besides his wife, Stockan leaves three minor children to mourn his loss, Peter R., William W. and Rachael C. Stockan, who have been residing in Oakland with friends.

Funeral services were held at 1:30 P. M. from the mortuary chapel of W. C. Lasswell & Co., under the auspices of Amity Lodge No. 370, P. & A. M. Interment was in Cypress Lawn Memorial Park.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY WILL INSTALL NEW OFFICERS

The members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, American Legion Post No. 410, held their regular meeting last Friday night at Eagles Hall.

Mrs. Jones, historian, has been doing philanthropy work for the unit, and gave a very interesting report on the condition of the families of the unemployed who have been aided by this body of women.

The permanent charter has been received and all charter members are urged to sign the charter before the installation of officers, which is to take place at the second regular meeting in October. The officers will be installed by Mrs. Holt, president of Unit No. 2. A number of distinguished guests are to be present at this time, among them being Mrs. Anderson, president of District No. 8, of which the Daly City Auxiliary is a part.

Retiring President Mrs. Kathryn Foreman has promised many interesting things for this evening, and all members are urged to be present and give their support to the new officers.

HAPPY RAMBLERS VISIT SACRAMENTO

With an open truck and plenty of blankets, the Happy Ramblers left for Sacramento last Saturday evening, where they were the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Vishnevsky, the night being spent in dancing and singing. Sunday was spent on the American river, boating and swimming. It was a beautiful day. Some of the boys were displaying their manly art in handling a canoe, when Handsome "Doc" and "What-a-Man" Seth invited one of the lady members on a trip over the rapids. The descending was beautiful, but on the return she remarked that it was the first time she ever walked back from a canoe ride—with apologies to Handsome "Doc" and "What-a-Man" Seth. The canoe leaked.

Those enjoying the outing were Mr. and Mrs. Bill Vishnevsky, Mr. and Mrs. S. Hamberg, Mr. and Mrs. W. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. M. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. H. Rudolph, Mr. and Mrs. G. Openshaw, Mr. and Mrs. "Doc" Thomas, Melba Sully, Bertha Glazier, Bill Zari, R. Glazier, Fern Openshaw, Doris Hamberg, Jane and Bernice Hinrichsen.

CITY INVITED TO VISIT NAVY YARD

Mayor H. H. Smith announces the receipt of a letter from Rear Admiral G. W. Laws, U. S. N., inviting the people of Daly City to participate in the Navy Day exercises at the Mare Island Navy Yard on October 27.

In his letter to Mayor Smith, Admiral Laws says:

"All parts of the Navy yard, including every shop and every ship at the yard, will be open for inspection, and your constituents from Daly City are urged to accept our hospitality on that date.

"All day long, from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M., there will be a continuous program of interesting events, so that no matter what time of day the people from Daly City may arrive, they will be assured of seeing something worth while. It may be the anchor from Robinson Crusoe's island, or it may be the U. S. S. Argonaut, one of the latest and largest submarines in the world, which, on that date, will be in dry dock and open to visitors so that it may be seen in its entirety, both from outside and inside."

The call for observance of Navy day at Mare Island was issued by Admiral Laws, yard commandant, on orders from the Secretary of the Navy.

Navy day was first introduced by the Navy League of the United States. Last year thirty-three governors and hundreds of mayors took part in programs which were broadcast by 163 radio stations.

CATHOLIC DAUGHTERS CELEBRATE BIRTHDAY

Masonic Hall was the scene of a very pleasant gathering last Sunday afternoon and evening when Court St. Mary No. 1155, Catholic Daughters of America, of Daly City, celebrated its first birthday anniversary.

A large class of candidates were initiated into the order and the ritualistic work was exemplified by the hostess Court, St. Mary, with the Grand Regent, Mrs. Josephine T. Johnson, presiding.

A large crowd from the various Courts throughout the Bay region were present to witness this ceremony, as well as many of the Grand officers and representatives of the National Court.

A delightful afternoon was spent and at the close of the session a delicious supper was served in the banquet hall. The tables were beautifully decorated in the colors of the order, gold, purple and white, and a huge birthday cake graced the center of the hall.

Interesting talks were given by the chaplain of Court St. Mary, Rev. Father James P. Donohoe, and Rev. Father Jennings, as well as the many visiting Grand officers of the Catholic Daughters of America and the Knights of Columbus.

Mrs. Christine Michelson and her able assistants, who had charge of the banquet, received many congratulations on its success. The decorations, under the supervision of Mrs. Angela Johnson, were strikingly beautiful. The musical program, under the direction of Mrs. Adele Hecht, organist of Court St. Mary, was particularly good. Vocal selections were rendered by Miss Mary Mooney, Mrs. Frank McCormick, Miss Ida Clancy, Mrs. Maud Hayden and Master Frank McCormick.

Court St. Mary was highly complimented on the good work done by its officers and members since its institution, and best wishes were extended by the many guests for continued success and prosperity.

CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Minnie Hodek, of 60 Woodrow street, was hostess at a delicious luncheon on September 29, in celebration of her birthday. The table was beautifully decorated with assorted shades of pompon dahlias. Whist was enjoyed, and the hostess received many lovely gifts from the following friends: Mesdames Christine Eichler, Anna Romer, B. Haddon, Roy Glendening, F. Rothwell, A. Weiss, H. Diederickson, Edna E. Goodenough, H. Bonada, J. Hodek; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Newby, Master Rothwell Goodenough and Miss Audrey Glendening.

FAST ONES READY FOR FALL RACES

Fans like a hores that has sufficient "foot" to go right out on the head end, and set a sparkling pace for the slower beginners. Satin Spar, which has arrived at Tanforan, is of that type. The chestnut gelding came West in Willard Mack's Bill Bee stable and apparently will be in the "pink" for the opening at Tanforan, Friday, November sixth.

Trainer Al Jones brought Satin Spar to Tanforan from Lincoln Fields, where his "champ" had been contesting with the best handicap performers. It is planned to nominate Satin Spar for the rich stakes to be run at Tanforan at the coming session. The clever two year old Sun's Son was also in the shipment.

Satin Spar has won nine races this year and after a month's rest here undoubtedly will be in the form that made him such a consistent winner early in the year. Late he has been battling valiantly enough but unluckily could not finish better than second behind such clever ones as Pittsburgher and Don Leon. Wherever he goes, he is saddled to compete with the highest class of horses.

The good galloper can turn on at any distance from six furlongs to a mile and a sixteenth or a little farther and on that account is a very valuable animal. He is a phenomenal racer in sloppy footing and on occasion has run almost as fast in the ooze as on a dry track.

The blood lines of the Satin one are of particular interest to Californians as his sire, imported White Satin, is from Jean's Folly, a daughter of Ayrshire. The Ayrshire strain was made use of extensively at the Napa Stock Farm, of the late A. B. Spreckles. Solitaire II, a stock horse that stood at Napa for many years, was by Ayrshire. It will be recalled Ayrshire was by Hampton, a line that is still going strong. Satin Spar gets the desirable blood of the great St. Simon through Ulrand, his dam, which is by the St. Simon horse Rabelais.

California bred runners, owned by John W. Marchbank, have arrived at Tanforan from Lincoln Fields and are in their old stalls at the Peninsula track. Giovanna, winner of three races on the "Big time", De Swasey, victor in the Pacific Coast Breeders Association Handicap last Fall, the clever Chepera, Chazzan, Mopeco, Peace Princess, make up the string of the well known breeder.

All these thoroughbreds were reared at Heather Farm, Contra Costa county, and undoubtedly will be as

AMERICAN LEGION TO INSTALL OFFICERS

Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, will hold installation of officers Friday evening, October 9, at Eagles Hall. There will be a number of visitors and distinguished guests, and plenty of entertainment has been arranged for. Don't fail to be on hand, and bring that prospective member with you.

Last Sunday's horseshoe game was very well attended and high scores were in order, one team scoring forty-five points in a fifteen inning game. If you are a fan, be on hand Sunday mornings for a workout.

FOUR TEETH BASIS OF SAN MATEO SUIT

Four of his best teeth were "wrongfully removed," Annibale Vespa, a marble worker, declares in a suit for $10,000 damages filed recently against Dr. Roy M. Lawrence, San Mateo dentist. The good teeth, according to Vespa, were yanked out without the formality of asking his consent. And along with them went some bridge-work, for which Vespa asks an additional $500.

EAGLES DEFEATED BY LOMITA PARK

The Daly City Eagles' baseball team traveled down to Lomita Park last Sunday and were defeated by the Lomita Park team, 6 to 1.

The game was a pitching duel between Ford, of the Daly City Eagles, and Yeomans, of the Lomita Park team. Three errors at critical stages in the last innings of the game decided the issue in Lomita's favor.

The Daly City boys started out in great style, turning in a fast triple play in the third inning, when Lomita Park, with men on first and third and none away, threatened to score. A long fly to Shaw in center field, who threw out the man advancing to the home plate, Smith, the Eagles' catcher, getting the man on a pretty play, and then picked himself out of the dirt and threw to second to get the man advancing from first, to complete a triple play and retire the side.

Yeomans, the Lomita Park pitcher, featured for the home boys, while for the Eagles, Ford and Smith turned in a great game.

Sunday, October 11, the Daly City Eagles' team will play Eagles No. 5 on the Ocean View grounds. Watch the San Francisco Chronicle on Saturday for the time of the game.

popular this season as in the previous three seasons at Tanforan. Trainer H. W. ("Frisco") Hoag reported that the gallopers shipped in excellent style and looks for them to be better than ever before after a "spell" at the Peninsula plant.

The winner, Maxwell M, which has been galloping on the home course at Heather Farm, will be sent over to Tanforan in a few days to join the Eastern contingent. The fleet Annie D, which scored in the last race on the last day of the spring meeting at Tanforan will be seen under colors at the coming period of racing.

SUPERVISORS ARE AGAINST JAIL SITE

The San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday brought to a close the long-delayed decision on San Francisco's application for a permit to erect a jail on the Sneath ranch in the northern part of the county. The decision of the board was made upon a vote of three to one. Those voting for denying the permit were supervisors Poole, Francis and Brown. Supervisors Thompson and Hickey voted against denying the petition.

The application for the jail site had been before the board of supervisors in one form or another for several months. At first San Francisco sought a site on the coastside, and six prospective sites were considered. Later the Sneath ranch, near the Skyline boulevard west of Tanforan, was submitted. After consideration, the San Mateo county board denied a permit for this site. The application was again brought before the board some weeks ago, at which time San Francisco asked for a reconsideration of their request. The matter had been continued from meeting to meeting, until Monday's session. It is thought that this latest decision of the board will be final.

Prior to the vote on the proposition, Supervisor Hickey spoke in favor of granting the requested permit.

Joseph Phillips, right of way agent for San Francisco, also spoke in favor of the permit.

SURVEY REVEALS COUNTY GROWTH

San Mateo county has a greater prospective value in real estate than any other bay county, according to Guy Wilfred Hayler, city and regional planning engineer, who recently completed a survey for the Dared D. Bohannon organization.

Following are some of the interesting facts set forth in Hayler's report: Some 30,000 acres may be added to San Mateo county's area by reclamation from the waters of the bay.

About 62,900 acres are available for homesites and business purposes. The hilly regions offer opportunities for water reservations, parks, agriculture and rural residences.

Twenty-five per cent of all available land is now developed or occupied. Forty per cent of the present city areas are fully developed, and the same is true of twenty-five per cent of the unincorporated territory.

Expansion charts show that the drift of population is toward the south.

San Mateo county shows a steadily increasing population. In the last decade the Redwood City-Palo Alto area has increased 125.9 per cent in population.

GRACE CHURCH SERMON TOPIC

"How to be Happy Though a Christian!" is the theme for the morning service in the Presbyterian church, corner of Hanover and Evergreen, Sunday. Some time ago an author announced the title of his book as "How to be Happy Though Married." Happiness is the normal result of married life, but some people do not make a brilliant success of it. And happiness is the normal result of the Christian life, although some seem to think otherwise. In the evening a popular song service commences at 7:45.

ANNUAL LUNCHEON PLANNED BY WOODROW WILSON P. T. A.

The Woodrow Wilson-Vista Grande Parent-Teachers' Association lunch and reception will be held at the Daly City Methodist church, Santa Barbara and Vista Grande avenue, October 14, at 12 noon. This lunch is to be held for members of the unit, which includes nearly all of the teaching staff of the two schools. It is the purpose of the unit to bring into closer contact the parents and teachers, and they find this annual lunch is the best way to do this.

Mrs. J. R. Spaan, president of the Seventeenth district, and as many of the vice-presidents as are able, plan to be present at this time. There will be a meeting in the afternoon, to which those non-members who are interested in this work are cordially invited.

CROCKER SEWING CIRCLE MEET

Last Monday morning the members of the Crocker Sewing Circle met at the home of Mrs. E. Barrett, of Winchester street, and spent a very busy day. A delicious luncheon was served by the hostess. Among those present were: Mesdames C. B. Brown, I. Reiman, Della Campbell, Maynard Chesney, Orville D. Pauw, K. McDermott, Ethel Bolger and J. Jordan.

SURVEYOR OFFICE TO BE IN OLD JAIL

The question of providing additional space for county officers at Redwood City is still a vexing one to the San Mateo county board of supervisors, but action has been taken by the board which may in part solve the difficult problem. The board went on record last Monday as favoring the moving of County Surveyor James S. James' office into the old jail building on lower Broadway.

The proposal met with strong opposition on the part of Surveyor James, but was carried by the board.

The matter was brought before the board by Supervisor Poole, who said that of all the plans proposed, he believed the removal of the county surveyor's office to the old jail was the most practical. He declared that he had been talking with Architect Toepeke, and that the latter had told him that the old jail building would be of a permanent nature, while the erection of a temporary structure on the grounds of the court house would be a waste of money, and answer the purposes only temporarily.

Surveyor James declared that it would be against the law for the records of his office to be removed from the court house, and that to put his office in the old building would wreck his organization.

After a lengthy discussion by the members of the board, Supervisor Poole moved that the old jail be remodeled for use of the county surveyor and for any other officials that the board may see fit to transfer. The motion prevailed, Supervisors Poole, Francis and Brown favoring the action, while Supervisor Hickey voted against it. Supervisor Thompson had been excused before the matter was taken up by the board.

WELL KNOWN COUPLE CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Vireno, of Mission street, were married twenty-five years ago, on Wednesday, September 30. They celebrated this anniversary with a banquet and dinner dance in the Colonial restaurant, on Mission street, last Saturday night, with a group of about forty-six relatives as their guests.

The guests were seated at an artistically decorated table, through which a path of silver had been made. The table centerpiece was a large ornamented wedding cake, above which hung silver wedding bells that were attached to the chandeliers. The table was lighted by candles in beautiful silver holders. The table color scheme was carried out in white and silver. Silver baskets with a silver bell tied with a silver bow designated each guest's place at the table. Japanese lanterns were hung from a ceiling trimmed in orchid and green crepe paper.

Vocal solos were rendered by Miss Mabel Vireno, who was accompanied by her sister, Miss Esther Vireno, at the piano. Music for the dancing was furnished by a three piece orchestra composed of Richard Varni, accordion, Jack Rice, clarinet, and Clarence Amarosa, banjo.

Mr. and Mrs. Vireno were the recipients of many beautiful silver gifts. In the early morning hours the guests departed, wishing the happy couple many more years of happy wedded life.

Among the guests were: Mesdames B. Ottoboni, J. Assalino, J. Varni, E. Varni, D. Belli, W. Ottoboni, R. Ottoboni, Louis Nava, M. Gray, J. Delacqua, A. Vireno; Misses Olga Ottoboni, May Varni, Anita Varni, Gladys Assalino, Irene Assalino, Irene Moreschi, Mae Fareschi, Grace Semenza, Lenore Uchelli, Carol Shoenig, Mabel Vireno, Esther Vireno; Messrs. BAY SHORE COLLISION BRINGS DAMAGE SUIT

Anthony Martyasevich, recently injured in an automobile accident a miles north of Redwood City, has filed suit asking $50,000 damages of James Brennan, a resident of San Francisco. Brennan's car crashed into a light truck driven by Martyasevich on the Bay shore highway, September 19.

OCTOBER 4 TO 10 IS OBSERVED AS FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

October 4 to 10 is observed as Fire Prevention week. Notices have been put up all over the state to remind the people that fire prevention saves many lives and much property. Look around your home, your garage, etc. You might see some fire traps that should be eliminated.

JEFFERSON HIGH ENTERTAINS C. S. F.

Last Saturday the C. S. F. members of Jefferson high carried through a most successful program for the regional convention which was held at Jefferson. Approximately eighty delegates were present, representing almost a score of high schools in the bay district. Palo Alto high school sent a delegation of six, including two faculty members.

The program began at 10 A. M. Rose Merlo, president of Jefferson Chapter No. 194, gave the address of welcome, and Mary Conti acted in the capacity of secretary.

Several addresses were given during the morning session, one by Miss Hazel Walhauser, state president of the C. S. F., and another by Miss Sophia Cramer, central region vice-president of the C. S. F. These dealt with the benefits which the C. S. F. Society brings to present day high schools, and included not only high scholarship and its rewards, but high ideals in every sphere of life.

Principal James Ferguson of Jefferson High spoke on "Citizenship and the C. S. F." He enumerated the virtues necessary for membership in the C. S. F., and emphasized the importance of thoroughness in every sphere of life. In urging the members to carry on in the same way in after life, he said, "The world is waiting for the boy who will do his task so thoroughly that no one coming after him can do better."

He called attention to the economic middle in which we find our industrial world today, due, he said, to the shallow and selfish thinking of men who have been in places of power and influence. He pointed out the unenviable position of the laboring classes, due largely to the rapid development and use of labor saving machinery in all lines of industry. So we have developed, he believed, for the laboring man a condition of dependency which is comparable and perhaps worse than that found in the institution known as slavery. The cotton planter of the South fed and clothed his slaves, even through old age, he said. Our modern industrial system too often allows its workers to be provided for by the community chest, and even throws them on the scrap heap at middle age.

This situation presents problems that must be solved, Mr. Ferguson said. And he predicted that the solution would come from the ranks of those who are now in such societies as the C. S. F.—boys and girls of ability and industry and honesty and who are capable of thinking for themselves. These conditions present a challenge to the constructive ability of the generation now coming to manhood and womanhood.

At the luncheon Miss Pansy Abbott, county superintendent of schools, spoke on "What of Tomorrow." She followed in the same strain as Mr. Ferguson, emphasizing the call that is now coming to the young men and women of today to prepare for the tremendous responsibilities of tomorrow.

During the afternoon there were round table discussions under the leadership of members of Chapter 194. The central subject was finances in connection with the work of organization and included not only the idea of raising money but also of spending it in the most profitable way to further the purposes of the C. S. F.

The program closed with musical and dramatic selections by students of Jefferson.

The visiting delegates expressed their thanks to Jefferson C. S. F. members and to Miss Staib for the generous entertainment and excellent program furnished, and praised the Board of Education and Principal of Jefferson High for the splendid accommodations they had provided by means of a special study room for the local society. It was pleasing to them, they said, to see that in Jefferson high merit was recognized in superior scholarship and rewarded by unusual privileges which added dignity and honor to the membership.

Last week a saxophone belonging to Evelyn Rancatore disappeared from the high school. Principal James Ferguson had notification sent to the company from which the instrument was bought, with the result that a description was sent to the police departments of both San Francisco and Daly City. On Tuesday morning of this week Chief Jack Doyle notified Principal Ferguson that the instrument had been located in a San Francisco pawn shop. Now the police are on the track of the person who entered the school building and stole the saxophone.

Pupils of the high school have been warned against stray people who may enter the building for the purpose of stealing anything of value. Last winter two coats were stolen by some outsider. Anything of value should be either placed in the lockers or left with the secretary in the office for safekeeping.

During the past week the students have been busy making plans for the organization of clubs in extra curricular activities. There is already one known as the Press Club, consisting of students interested in newspaper work. It is sponsored by Miss Gibbins. The California Scholarship Federation, known as the C. S. F., consists of the students of highest grades in scholarship in the school, and is sponsored by Miss Staib. A committee has approached Mr. Quimback, asking him to sponsor a Science club, and he has consented to do so. Others are interested in a Spanish club, and are trying to find a faculty member to act as sponsor for it. The camera students and those interested in swimming and hiking are also hoping to have their clubs organized.

OPINION RENDERED IN MILEAGE FEE DISPUTE

Litigants demanding a jury trial must pay the mileage fees of jurors, according to an opinion rendered recently by District Attorney Edmund Scott.

The ruling by the district attorney was given on the request of County Clerk E. B. Hinman and concurred in by Judge Buck and Judge Swart.

The political code, as quoted by the district attorney, provides that the juror be paid 20 cents per mile when traveling to and from the courthouse.

Two men have been indicted by a San Francisco grand jury on murder charges in connection with the death of Mrs. Anita B. Lund, San Francisco nurse, whose battered body was discovered on September 13 at Rockaway Beach. They are Mario Muratore, asserted sweetheart of the dead woman, and Andrew Marek, alleged to have been the "doctor" in a criminal operation which caused the death of the woman. Both are facing murder charges brought by San Francisco police.

Two small Redwood City boys playing with an 18-inch rattlesnake were probably saved from death when they exhibited the reptile to James DeBenedetti, Redwood City mail carrier. DeBenedetti killed the snake, the fifth he has dispatched this year while on his route in the fashionable west end district of Redwood City.

ODDS AND ENDS OF WEEK'S NEWS

Despite a threatened walkout of volunteer firemen, Burlingame fire commission, backed by Mayor Buck and the City Council, refused to rescind its action reinstating Fred Stebe, who was dismissed by Chief Wilkie Dessen.

The body of Calisto Malinverni, Galileo high school student, who was drowned at Half Moon Bay while swimming on September 18, was recovered from the waters of the Pacific at Manhattan Beach, three miles south of Half Moon Bay, last Friday.

His body hanging over the edge of a wine vat in which he had been working, John Favelesse, 53, a gardener, was found late Saturday night in a garage at his home in San Mateo.

Michael Puga and his wife, Josephine, filed suit in the Superior Court at Redwood City recently for $32,486 damages from the Market Street Railway company as the result of an accident last January 15. Mrs. Puga alleges that she was a passenger on a street car that collided with a truck at Lawndale.

Marius Cochran, San Francisco motorist who attempted to run down Traffic Officer August Terragno in South San Francisco last week, was found guilty of reckless driving and fined $25 by Judge Edward Farrell.

Sale of the old Crossways farm in Burlingame, known as a part of the Carolan tract, to E. C. and O. M. Heuter, San Francisco developers, for nearly a quarter of a million dollars, has been announced by a Burlingame realty concern.

Louis Rebele, a prominent civic worker and member of the San Mateo library board, would like roosters in the vicinity of his home muzzled, moved or otherwise abated, he told City Manager E. P. Wilsey, in a complaint referred recently by the city manager to the police.

Carl E. Peterson, of Burlingame, has been named deputy county clerk by County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman to succeed Harold F. Anderson, recently appointed assistant district attorney.

Councilman Fred Towner of San Bruno, who returned last week from a trip to New York and Nova Scotia, was compelled to curtail his trip because of the excessive heat in the eastern seaport.

Audrey Townsend, a pupil in the sixth grade of the North Brae school, San Bruno, was the winner of the Community Chest slogan contest, sponsored by the San Bruno-Lomita Park community chest. Her slogan, "Do your best to fill the chest," earned her a cash award.

Stanley Hare, of Burlingame, suffered a fractured right leg in a pile up of automobiles following a collision on El Camino Real near Tanforan.

Frank W. Gordon, late Burlingame resident who died September 16 a few hours after he had been elected commander of the Burlingame Post of American Legion, left his estate, valued at about $2,500, to his widow, Violet Gordon, according to the will filed in Superior Court.

Construction of a second unit of the Hassler health home, near Redwood City, formerly the San Francisco health farm, an institution for tubercular patients, will be started as soon as supervisors of San Francisco approve an $85,375 appropriation for the contract.

Three children and three grandchildren will share the $8,500 estate of Mrs. Hermina B. Patterson, who died in San Francisco, September 29, according to the will filed in Superior Court. The will decrees that the property in Millbrae and Daly City be sold and the money distributed to the six children.

BOY SCOUT NOTES

Now that the Boy Scout dance is over, the boys wish to thank everyone who so generously helped make a success of our first public affair. We hope that all those present enjoyed themselves.

Daly City has always been far behind in its Scout population, but now we have no excuse, as we have the support of the people and the capital to work with. We now have our own District Council, composed of social, fraternal and commercial organizations, and our District Commissioner, and everything that is needed for success in Scouting. We all heard Mayor H. H. Smith state that if we could raise our enrollment to the percentage basis of the National Council, he would pay $25 a month as a maintenance fee, and in addition to that he would donate $50 to be used as rewards for those enlisting the most candidates.

The age limit is from 9 to 12 years for the Cubs, and from 12 years for the Boy Scouts.

Many people are under the impression that it requires a great deal of money for the boy to become a Scout. This is all wrong, as all that it requires is that the boy pay 50 cents a year for his own registration.

We are always happy to have any one visit our meetings, and all male adults are cordially invited to attend the Council meetings, held in the City Hall on the first and second Tuesdays of each month.

For October 18, the boys are planning another day hike. All boys wishing to attend may do so. We would also like to see more of the dads attend this next hike. C. S.

An auto stage collision on the Bayshore highway on August 16 which took the life of Mrs. Mamie C. Muller, of San Francisco, has resulted in the husband, William M. Muller, filing suit in the Superior Court for $25,000 damages against the Gray Line, Inc., of San Francisco, and Raymond J. Vocke, driver of the stage. Mrs. Muller was riding in an auto driven by Miss Bessie M. Vendarmark, a school teacher in Yosemite Park, when it was struck by the stage.

When he was arrested on a non-support charge, F. S. Orcutt of Norristown, Pa., had $1,400 in cash concealed under a porous plaster on his back.

HAWAIIAN COLTS FOR LOCAL TRACK

Charles A. Hartwell, who has been breeding fleet runners and sending them to the races for a number of years, is on the way to the Hawaiian Islands to "take up" a large band of young thoroughbreds. The youngsters, twenty-five in all, will arrive shortly before the opening of the fall meet at Tanforan, Friday, November sixth.

The Pleasanton sportsman plans to start some of the "Kanakas" toward the middle of the approaching racing season, as they have been thoroughly broken to bridle and saddle at their foaling place, the Parker ranch. The yearlings in the lot are expected to get to the post at the spring meet at Tanforan. Nearly all of the gallopers have the Sweep horse Rodgers as sire.

Hartwell has Desert Sun, Pnum Penh, and others here for the opening at Tanforan. They were campaigned on Eastern tracks in the summer and accounted for a number of high class events. Pnum Penh made a new track record at Devonshire and Desert Sun was so good no other two year old owner would oppose the Easter Bells gelding at Riverside Park and the "Sun" had to run against members of the mature division.

Ever a booster for Tanforan, Hartwell talked to many Easterners about making the shipment to the San Bruno course. He said: "I saw 'Dick' Carman, trainer of the Nevada Stock Farm string, and he told me Mr. Wingfield had written to him about racing at Tanforan. Carman was considering the matter and it would not surprise me if he had Hygo and other good ones at Tanforan."

"Ray Pollard has never been in the West, but is keen to make the trip this fall. He has done well with Uluniu, a son of Rodgers, and others. He is thinking of racing at Tanforan and then giving his horses a rest."

Hugro, stakes winner at Hawthorne and Lincoln Fields, is champion of the two year olds in the Middle West, just as the filly Top Flight is the best of the young ones on the New York tracks.

SAN MATEO JOURNALIST TO SERVE COMMISSION

D. E. O'Keefe, Redwood City newspaper man, will serve as secretary of the press committee of the California water investigation commission. Mr. O'Keefe was elected press secretary at a recent meeting of the commission, which is composed of California publishers friendly to Governor Rolph.

JUDGE REFUSES TO GIVE UP QUARTERS

The proposal of the county board of supervisors that the quarters now occupied by County Engineer James in Redwood City be remodeled for use as a court room has found opposition in Superior Judge Franklin Swart. Judge Swart has let it be known that he will not vacate the supervisor's room in which he has been holding court. The supervisors proposed to switch the county engineer to the quarters now occupied by the librarian, and remodel the old Broadway jail for occupancy by the librarian. An earlier proposal by the supervisors to remodel the detention home into offices for District Attorney Scott and Superintendent of Schools Pansy J. Abbott was dropped when Miss Abbott objected.

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

The prediction that 250,000 "foreign" automobiles will bring about 750,000 tourists to California to the Olympic Games held in Los Angeles during 1932 was made by G. T. McCoy, principal assistant to State Engineer C. H. Purcell.

The death knell of the notorious grapevine grade, twenty-nine miles south of Bakersfield on the Golden State Highway, was sounded by the California Department of Public Works with an announcement that realignment of the grade will be included in an immediate $2,691,500 construction program.

Ventura county soon will have a safe refuge for quail, as a result of the acceptance of the offer of A. A. Rubel for a refuge on the Camulos ranch, east of Piru. The 1815-acre ranch will be posted and young quail released. The State Fish and Game Commission decided that such a refuge should be established in Ventura county.

Plans to control the dreaded pine bark beetle, scourge of the forests, ranking second only to fire, may offer a partial relief to unemployment in the western United States. This announcement was made by J. M. Miller, senior entomologist of the Federal Forest Insect Investigations of the Federal Department of Agriculture, with offices at the University of California.

Nearly 150 Southern California newspaper publishers and their wives recently attended a banquet at Riverside honoring the completion by John E. King, publisher of the Hemet News, of fifty years in the newspaper business. The dinner, given at the Aurea Vista Hotel, was sponsored by the Riverside-San Bernardino counties unit of the California Newspaper Publishers' Association.

The Santa Barbara County Board of Supervisors, which has had under consideration the problem of care and treatment of emergency indigent patients, has indicated that the County Health Department must take over all the health work for the county, including the city department, to relieve private hospitals of the care of indigent patients.

Another rich gold deposit was reported uncovered by the stimulation of the search for the precious metal brought about by the depression. Resumption of operations at the famed Carson hill group of gold mines at Melones, has disclosed a new ore body, officials said. The new Carson Hill Gold Mining Corporation reopened the mine, after it had remained idle since the shut-down nearly five years ago.

Terming the Wickersham commission's crime report "worse than a crime," and declaring it must have been prepared by "a man with a diseased mind," State Director of Penology O'Brien led a movement at the closing session of a California sheriffs' and peace officers' convention at Salinas to appoint a committee of California sheriffs and chiefs of police to make an "unbiased" report on the Wickersham report for association members. Placer county Sheriff Gum was elected president of the joint association, and City Treasurer Matheson of San Francisco was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Minor road and trail work in the national forests of California for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, involved an expenditure of $1,264,776. This does not include $1,469,917 of Forest Service road and trail funds spent for the construction and maintenance of major or standard roads within or adjacent to the national forests that are part of the State and county highway systems. New construction totaled 348 miles of road, 356 miles of motorways or fire protection roads, 187 miles of trail and 195 miles of trailways or secondary trails. Maintenance of 6,457 miles of road, 3,066 miles of motorways, 14,679 miles of trail and 3,257 miles of trailways was accomplished.

The State's revenue from the gross receipts tax on truck lines may be reduced $400,000 yearly if a recent decision of the Los Angeles Superior Court is sustained on appeal, the State Board of Equalization said, at Sacramento. The suit was filed by the board against G. M. Duntley, Southern California truck operator, to collect $30,000 taxes asserted due for 1929-1930. He refused to pay, contending he operated between no fixed termini and had no established routes and was exempt from provisions of the law. Duntley won the case. The board pointed out that if Duntley is upheld on appeal it will mean only holders of certificates of convenience and necessity can be forced to pay the truck tax.

California's new law prescribing employment of citizens on public works applies to foremen and superintendents employed by contractors as well as ordinary laborers, Attorney General U. S. Webb ruled recently. Webb said, however, the law which became effective August 14 does not affect going contracts awarded prior to that date.

For every couple divorced in Orange county twenty-one couples are married. That's how well Dan Cupid is doing to preserve domestic order in this era when depression and desertion might be expected to go hand-in-hand. Records of County Clerk Back's office show 131 divorces have been granted this year as compared to 2778 marriages.

Interpreting the State election law on balloting by voters who change residence, Attorney-General U. S. Webb advised Secretary of State Frank C. Jordan as follows: "If a voter moves any place within a precinct his right to vote in that precinct is not affected. If he moves out of a precinct within forty days prior to an election but remains in the county, he may still vote in his old precinct."

According to a statement by County Agricultural Commissioner E. S. Kellogg, hay from San Joaquin Valley has been barred from Santa Barbara county. This step has been taken, according to Kellogg, because of the fact that the hay from the inland valley region is said to contain the destructive puncture vine. The order bars hay shipments into this county from Kern, Tulare, Merced, Modesto, Fresno, Madera and Mariposa counties.

Upon his return from a tour of England and Continental Europe, A. McDermott, Riverside citrus shipper, said that he found the California Valencia the popular citrus fruit in Liverpool, London and other cities. The California fruit was selling at about two shillings per box more in England than was citrus fruit from Brazil and South Africa.

Public co-operation with the State in curbing activities of fraudulent land promoters preying on California school children was requested in a statement by Joseph P. Smith, State Real Estate Commissioner. Smith charged "worthless desert lands" in adjoining states are being dumped on children and their unsuspecting parents as "free lots" and "grand prizes" with heavy profit to the unscrupulous operators. The statement said the land operators go to places frequented by school children and on promise of a prize get youngsters to sign their names and addresses on cards. When a child has won a "600 lot" as a big grand prize, the parents are usually required to pay from $35 to $37.50 to "cover expenses" of the deed, etc., Smith said.

California hunters killed more than 10,000 deer in the first half of the season which has just closed, the State Fish and Game Commission announced recently. This represents more than were killed in the same period last year, the records show. Last year a total of 24,000 deer fell before the hunters' guns during the entire season. Officers of the commission believe that the number of deer in the state is increasing. There are now about 400,000, it is estimated by wardens. Mountain lions and coyotes kill more deer than hunters, officials maintain. They point out that, despite the work of the state lion hunter, there are still about 400 lions at large. Lions kill on the average of one deer a week each, it is said, while coyotes also account for a large number, especially does and fawns.

Close of summer season in Sequoia National Park marks completion of two outstanding projects for benefit of the traveling public. Principal of these is the new rock stairway to the top of Morro Rock, which will be completed by November 1. The old wooden stairway erected in 1917, and which has made Morro Rock famous throughout the world, will be removed. Permanence and safety have been combined in providing a route which may be used by young and old alike. Almost as important will be opening of the Lodge Pole and Clover Creek bridges, permitting for the first time automobile travel to the west side of Marble Fork Canyon. More than 500 have been employed in government operations in the park this season, representing a monthly pay roll of $75,000. Practically all employees are residents of California.

Despite a flood of almost cataclysmic proportions, the mountain city of Tehachapi is the exception to the rule and has felt nothing of this period of depression. Mayor Kanstein said recently. "We cleaned up a profit of $62,232 on our pear crop alone," he said, "and this despite the fact that we lost twenty cars of pears due to the flood." The profit on pears cited by Kanstein is net. The Mayor of the mountain city said that Tehachapi will build a City Hall and jail within a few weeks; that the Jack Irriart Building, a new brick structure to house three stores, is virtually complete; that Keeley & Son have contracted for two more store buildings to be built by Croft of Bakersfield; that 200 men are at work on the prison buildings for women and that in general the district is in a period of high prosperity.

A check of the votes disclosed that both the Oakdale and the South San Joaquin Irrigation District bond refunding plans were carried by overwhelming majorities in elections recently. An attempt to recall Edward Norman Moulton, director of division No. 3 in the Oakdale district was defeated.

H. N. White has been selected as chairman of the Anaheim chapter of the American Red Cross. He has named Arch Henry as roll-call chairman, and the organization expects to open its annual roll call November 11.

MILAN and the LAKES

Fishermen on Lake Garda.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)
MILAN, chief city of the Lombard-Piedmont region of northern Italy, announces plans for a metropolitan underground railway system which, when completed, will have a total length of 50 miles. The announcement follows another telling of the completion of Italy's largest railroad station in Milan, a huge structure which compares favorably with the great terminals of the world.

Italy's first subway system and the biggest railway station are but milestones marking the progress of this modern, wide-awake city, which had the first public library in Europe and was the first city on the continent to light its streets with electricity. Viewing the rich and interesting history of this metropolis of the upper Po valley, its outstanding leadership among Italian cities, its virility through centuries, and its varied accomplishments, the observer may be inclined to give serious consideration to the boast of the Milanese that "what Milan thinks today, Italy will think tomorrow."

Milan, in the matter of a new subway, is hurrying its plans because Rome also is planning a subway system. But Rome must hesitate and discuss. Underneath the streets and buildings of modern Rome are foundations of ancient imperial Roman monuments, and parts of the Catacombs. Milan faces no such obstacles, and will radiate five lines from the center of the city as conditions require. All five of the lines, two of which will reach points 20 miles away, will have stations within a few yards of each other in the Piazza del Duomo. A population of more than 3,000,000 people will be served by this new system, up-to-date in every respect.

Lombardy and Piedmont comprise the plains of the upper reaches of the great Po valley, the Alpine foothills, and the southern and eastern slopes of a large part of the Alps themselves. Milan, on a fertile plain near the southern terminus of some of the most important of the Alpine passes, was a town of considerable importance even in the dim historic days of 222 B. C. when it was captured by the Romans. It was then, as it is today, a close second city in point of population in Italy.

Leader in Many Respects.

Milan early earned a position of leadership among surrounding cities, a leadership, however, which did not go unchallenged. The city has been destroyed many times, once by a league of neighboring towns, and at other times by alien conquerors. After each destruction it has sprung up on a seemingly firmer foundation to achieve greater popularity and a more far-reaching influence.

Apart from any reputation Milan may have gained as an index to industrial unrest, it is a leader among Italian cities in other respects. Indeed, the Milanese insist that their city, their "capitale morale," is the very heart and head of Italy's modern life and activity—"first in industry, first in municipal progress, first in political importance."

Even at the beginning of the Eleventh century Milan was of some importance industrially, its handicraft workers turning out textiles, arms and jewelry. The innumerable wars to which Italian cities and provinces were subjected slowed up its industrial development even after the introduction of the factory system, but since the unification of Italy in 1870, and the relative political calm that has followed, the growth of the city's industries has been marvelous. Textiles, locomotives and electrical apparatus are the leading products and a long list of metal manufactures could be added.

The industrial plants of Milan have fairly burst the confines of the old city and many are to be found in numerous populous suburbs that have sprung up, especially since 1895. The population of Milan itself now numbers close to a million. Its population is exceeded only slightly, if at all, by that of Naples, and is considerably in excess of that of Rome.

Water Power Development.

Interesting is the fact that all industries in this section of Italy are not dependent on the importation of coal. Piedmontese and Lombardian industry has been turning more and more during recent years to the use of electric power generated from the great falls and rapids of the many streams that, tumbling down from the heights of the Alps almost at the walls of the cities, may be made to take the place of the expensive fuel for which Italy is dependent on foreign countries.

Milan is today a half-way house for people rushing up and down the earth, from the Mediterranean to the Alps, from Venice to Como; it is so very well known, so very crowded, so busy, so bustling, one feels there is nothing more to be told of her. Perhaps because she seems so entirely modern, because she bears so few traces of her earlier years, because while her sister cities point so proudly to Etruscan, to Greek, to early Roman remains, she invites the visitor to contemplate her Galleria Vittorio Emanuele, one feels she does not appreciate her past.

It is not so, she has been literally trampled into the dust so often she would have nothing but scars to show but for the invincible courage which made her instantly build on her ruins the foundations of yet greater things.

Gian Galeazzo, who made the Certosa possible, did much for Milan. To him we owe the cathedral, one of the largest in the world. What joy must have been his to see these wonderful structures growing, to know that from his care they came.

Milan cannot hold anyone long who remembers that Lake Como is but two short hours away, with open-air pictures far lovelier than any that Milan's rich museums hold. The little town of the same name at the southern end of the lake is quaint enough; it has a charming cathedral; it looks straight up to the snowpeaks, but it is not a place to linger; choose rather some quieter place farther up the lake—Cadenabbia, Menaggio, Bellagio.

Beauties of the Lakes.

When people speak of the Italian lakes it is usually Como and its neighbors that are meant; Como, which is all Italian; Lugano, which is largely Swiss, and Maggiore, which is largely Italian; but there are others, very tiny, perhaps, but also lovely; Orta, Varese, and to the east Isco, Idro; above all, beautiful Lake Garda, whose upper end was Austrian. So many poets have sung their charms for twenty centuries, so many artists depicted their beauties, what remains for un-gifted lovers to say? So much of history is sleeping in their shining waters, so many world-known names connected with their shores, what could one summer bring to all their memories?

Which is the loveliest? Who knows? Undoubtedly Lake Como is the most popular. And does any visitor fail to row across its blue, satiny surfaces to the marble steps of the Villa Carlotta to see the Thorvaldsen Frieze and Canova's Cupid and Psyche? One does not need eyes to know which is the favorite. The "oh's" and "ah's," the sighs and silences tell it; but, then, love is immortal, while war is transient.

Lugano is quite a different lake from Como, although so near—but a single rocky ridge, an outlying spur of the great Alpine chain between. It is wonderfully picturesque, with its steep, wooded sides and quaint towns, pink and yellow and mauve, staged upward from the lake like galleries at a theater. If there are fewer luxurious villas, fewer over-rich gardens, there is more of romantic naturalness.

On Como one senses luxuriously a civilization two thousand years old; on Lugano one feels ageless nature's unmatched loveliness. If largely Swiss politically, in appearance Lugano is wholly Italian—the half-wild Italian which recalls the ancient freedom-loving Celt, not that which reminds us of polished Rome.

Lake Maggiore is almost as well known, as much traveled, as Como. Its individuality is just as strong as that of the other two; to see one is by no means to see all. One must travel up and down it by boat in the morning light and in the sunset glow. One must make excursions along its shores and to the Borromeo islands, which float so picturesquely on its surfaces. One must climb the rocky hillsides about it and get new and surprising views of its size and splendor. One must see it in storm as well as sunshine; see the white snow to northward sharply defined against the blue sky; look in vain for peaks that are hidden in swirling masses of mist and cloud.

Name Well Earned

The French Foreign Legion is called the Death Legion because it has been employed in many of the hardest and most dangerous campaigns.

IN THE WORLD THAT WAS 'FLOWERLAND'

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service.)

FROM the time Ruth Adlon was fifteen, and had "quilt school," as the saying goes among the Ruth Adlons, she had been an "instructor" in a dance hall known as "Flowerland." It was one of those resorts where, for an entrance fee, you may purchase a strip of tickets; six for twenty-five cents. Each one of these entitles you to a partner for one dance number. There were about fifteen girls and six or seven men employed in the same capacity as Ruth. They were professional partners.

Ruth Adlon's fervor for the dance was something that seemed to surpass her own vitality. She was tireless. Fragile, to what seemed a breaking point, nervous, slender, and of a wax-like pallor, her feet, even on those rare occasions when she sat on the sidelines, when a partner had not claimed her with his ticket, teetered. The rhythm of the jazz music seemed to run through her veins, and to keep her constantly excited. She was one of the best (if not the best) dancers at Flowerland.

The system there was on a commission basis. Your income consisted of a percentage on the number of tickets you collected during an evening. Ruth earned more than any girl on the staff. She had her regular customers, and while among them were many who excited her risibility, her aversion or even her repulsion, in the main Ruth enjoyed her work. She could truthfully say of herself that she never tired dancing.

One of the youths employed in a similar capacity at Flowerland was in love with Ruth. His name was Christian Cowen. Ruth used to tease him about this name of his, it seemed so incongruous, considering the environment. And so it was. As a matter of fact, Christian was the son of a Methodist minister in a small Southern town. He had drifted eastward, chiefly to escape his father's insistence that he follow in the ministerial footsteps. He too was a frail fellow, distinctly of a social class above that of his colleagues, yet strangely at home in the gay, relaxed, whirling world that was Flowerland.

It was extraordinary that such an environment could have turned out a girl as unworldly as Ruth Adlon. Her partners were just so many customers to her. At the close of her work-a-day, or rather her work-a-night, she forgot them as promptly as a salesman forgets the string of people to whom he had sold coffee over the counter during an afternoon. In fact, it might be said of Ruth Adlon, that she was a girl's girl. She enjoyed the gossip among them. She liked to walk home with one for a companion. It was seldom that she consented to an outside engagement with one of the partners she met in Flowerland. Not that she had any scruples about the life of the dance hall, but Ruth was not interested. In the midst of one of the most exciting artificial and even menacing environments in the world, Ruth danced along in a way that was almost naive.

That is why her affair with Christian Cowen, when it came, was one that from the very first started in to be of more serious moment than is usually the case in such an environment.

They fell in love and immediately their solemn young eyes fastened upon the goal of marriage. Ruth entertained no illusions about the ambitions or the potentialities of Christian. To her he was merely a darling boy who needed her. And Ruth needed him. On the initial equipment of loving one another deeply, and about one hundred and seventy-five dollars between them, they were married, and continued their joint work at Flowerland until four months before Ruth was going to have her child.

In the sixteen months of their marriage, these two little dancing people, so curiously dependent upon one another in the vast amusement world in which they whirled, had feathered their tiny nest of an up-town flat and settled down to a happiness that was drenching and all-sufficient, except for one fly in a smooth ointment.

Christian, who loved his dancing wife with all the tenacious capacity of the frail, was branded in his make-up with a broad streak of jealousy. Because she was so delectable to him, it was inconceivable that she could be anything else to the hundreds who were fortunate to hold her in the dance. This tormenting quality within himself he managed to keep latent until there developed in the little home certain complications of most serious portent.

When their baby girl was four months old, a stroke of invisible lightning, as it were, smote the happy little household.

Whether during the dance, or in some twisted motion of which he had not been conscious, Christian after suffering some weeks of pain in silence, went to a physician who X-rayed his hurting spine and found a fracture.

Overnight, as it were, if not only because necessary, but imperative, for

Ruth to take upon her slender shoulders the entire responsibilities of the household.

For eight months, Christian Cowen lay flat on his back in a rigid plaster cast on a hospital cot. For eight months, Ruth Cowen twinkled on her toes, to meet the expenses of that driven little household, and strangely enough, thrived doing it. And so did her baby. It was impossible to employ the services of a nurse in the household, and so, to her despair at first, she was obliged to entrust the child to a nursing home for infants. But the little girl, even as her mother, seemed to bloom and blossom under what might normally be considered an adverse condition, and as Ruth beheld this take place, her heart on that score at least was light within her.

It was a strenuous, nerve-racking life, darting like a frenzied messenger of sweetness, between the dance hall, the nursing home and the hospital where Christian lay strapped to his cot.

His recovery was tedious, slow and torturous. And yet, Ruth who hovered so lovingly over him, did not know the most tortuous aspect of it.

Lying there day after day, week after week, month after month, the pressure of the secret jealousy came to be almost unbearable to Christian. Evenings, when the ward lights were low and the patients about him had dropped off to their troubled sleep, he was forced to lie there, visioning Ruth in the arms of others. It was impossible to imagine that the men who held her did not thrill to her nearness as he did. It was impossible to fight down the frenzy, knowing that even as he lay there, she was desirable to others. It made of him, as the months wore on, a fretful, nervous, irascible patient, sharp with his nurses, critical, even cruel, in his remarks to Ruth.

There came a time, however, when Christian, on crutches, was able to leave the hospital; was even able, on an evening, to hobble down, when assisted by Ruth, and sit on the sidelines in the dance hall and watch the scene.

It was his idea that this might ease the secret torture.

On the contrary, it only seemed to inflame it. The sight of her, tireless, enthusiastic, playful, even with the burden of her responsibilities full upon her, actually seeming to delight in the act of the dance, was even more than he could bear.

Poor Christian, in his sense of defeat and in his love for this girl; and in his fear and torment for her, he was all warped inside, and of that Ruth knew nothing. She only saw her maimed, nervous husband through the eyes of her desire to serve him and to ameliorate, if possible, the dreariness of the semi-invalidism that seemed to stretch wearily ahead.

By now, the hurting jealousy of Christian's began to take on a certain menace. He plainly detected that in Ruth's dancing there was a joy-of-life.

There was one Spanish fellow in particular, who used to spend his entire strip of tickets in dances with Ruth, toward whom she seemed to lift a face as dewy as a flower. Sitting on the sidelines with his crutches beside him, slow smoldering hates began to burn in the maimed husband of Ruth.

The two things that Christian loved best in life, that small, dancing mother and the small child she had begot, were in peril. And somehow, to the feverish brain of the troubled young husband, the Spanish fellow who came to the dance hall once or twice a week began to be the symbol of that peril.

One evening, there occurred in that dance hall what seemed a miracle, although medically, and in the colder annals of science, it is known as "trauma."

In the midst of what was the routine performance of Ruth dancing around the floor in the arms of the young Spaniard, Christian, unable to bear any longer what seemed to him the amorous clasp of these two, jerked himself to his feet, and forgetful of his spine, rushed without his crutches out to the center of the floor, hurling them apart.

In the confusion and the unpleasant notoriety of the moment, one outstanding fact was revealed to Ruth. Christian was standing erect and strong on his two feet. Christian was able to walk off that dance floor without the aid of crutches.

That was the beginning; the beginning of a great many things in their little household. Also it revealed to Ruth the pitiful, tortured mental life that had been her husband's throughout the months. More than that, it revealed to her the power of his mind over the matter of his body.

Christian, who walks as normally as anyone now, has a paying position with a commercial house; Ruth is now able to carry on a life she loves even over and above the life of dancing.

She is mistress of a little home and of the day-by-day destiny of two growing children.

Scissors Old Implements

It was formerly believed that scissors were invented in Venice in the Sixteenth century, but records show that implements similar to our modern scissors were in use very much earlier than this period. In the remains of Pompeii shears were found made of iron and steel, as well as bronze. Scissors also were in use in various oriental countries from a very early period. It is stated that those manufactured in Europe were copied from the Persian. The oriental scissors were very much ornamented and frequently in the form of a bird, the blade forming the beak.

PASSING OF DWIGHT W. MORROW

The sudden passing of Dwight W. Morrow was a distinct shock to the American public. In this mellowed gentleman was embodied all that is best of our national traits and characteristics. He was a man of splendid intellect. He was tolerant, democratic, humane. His was a heart big enough to embrace the whole of humanity, regardless of race or creed.

It may be said of Dwight W. Morrow that the very last act of his was in its nature noble and humanitarian. Just before death claimed him, he made a radio appeal in connection with a Jewish charity drive.

Though he was big, able and profound, this man in his contact with the world manifested a charming simplicity, that winning absence of strut and bombast which has often been mentioned by psychologists as one of the characteristics of true greatness.

As ambassador to Mexico he was esteemed by peon and aristocrat alike. And in his own country, he enjoyed the good will of all people.

The union of Dwight Morrow's daughter, Ann, and Charles A. Lindbergh caused a great rising of the tide of Morrow popularity. And the shock of the sudden passing of this distinguished American is heightened by the fact that Ann and Lindy were at the other end of the world at the tragic moment.

Dwight W. Morrow and Calvin Coolidge were college classmates, and Coolidge expressed his life-long fondness for Morrow when as President of the United States he showered him with honors.

Even the recent heat wave failed to make us wish we were with Captain Wilkins on his submarine expedition to the North Pole.

MANY BLAMED UNJUSTLY

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," wrote Shakespeare, and in these strenuous times the statement applies to nearly everyone in authority, whether of kingly or lesser degree.

It is natural to blame those in power for bad times and give them credit for good times, whether they are really responsible or not—and usually they are not. But right now there is much uneasiness among those who hold responsible offices, both here and abroad, through fear that they may be displaced because of the dissatisfaction which exists with respect to economic conditions.

The fact is that general conditions seem to have a habit of fluctuating between boom and depression, regardless of what parties or individuals happen to be in power at any particular time. Recent attempts to improve conditions by legislation have proved futile, and it is doubtful that legislation alone ever increased prosperity for any considerable period.

In spite of political nostrums which are ever freely offered to cure economic ills, the ancient laws of supply and demand appears to hold good. And until supply and demand can be controlled through the concerted action of the people themselves, the possibility of which seems very remote, we shall have alternating boom and depression.

About all we can do is to try to curb the extravagances of the one, and mitigate the distress of the other. Those who happen to be in power when hard times come will be blamed in future in the past, and in most cases unjustly.

OVERSEAS FLIGHTS

So many overseas flights have been made, both in airplanes and dirigibles, that for the sake of keeping the record straight in the minds of the public, an account of some of the first feats of this nature may be of interest.

In order to grasp the significance of the early feats in this connection, it is necessary to distinguish between the conditions which attended them. The facts may be briefly stated, as follows:

The first aircraft to fly across the Atlantic was the U. S. Navy seaplane NC-4, in May, 1919, with Lieutenant Commander A. C. Read in command. This was not a non-stop flight, however, as stops were made in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and the Azore Islands.

The first non-stop flight across the Atlantic was made by Alcock and Brown of the British air force in June, 1919, between Newfoundland and Ireland.

The first trans-Atlantic flight by a dirigible was that of the British R-34, with thirty-one men aboard, in July, 1919. The year 1919, therefore, was an epoch-making one in the history of overseas flying.

But the greatest overseas flight of all time, so far, was that of Lindbergh, in May, 1927, his unequalled feat being that of crossing the Atlantic from the mainland of America to the mainland of Europe, alone. All other overseas crossings have been made by two or more aviators flying together.

So, until some other flyer equals or excels his great achievement, Lindbergh must be considered as standing in a class all by himself as the "Lone Eagle" of the air.

FIRE PREVENTION BEGINS AT HOME

In some European countries the owner of property where a fire originates through carelessness is legally responsible for any damage done to the property of others.

The principle behind the law is worth considering. It places the blame squarely where it belongs—on the individual whose carelessness or neglect is responsible for at least eight out of ten fires. We will never reduce the fire loss until we thoroughly understand that individual responsibility is the key to the entire problem.

This fact has been stressed time and again by public and private organizations. It has found expression in advertising, in the columns of newspapers, in speeches over the radio, and from the platform. Our national fire loss averages close to half a billion dollars annually, to which must be added the far greater yearly waste of ten thousand lives which fire destroys, and loss of business.

We must learn to guard our homes and places of business against fire. It must be made a regular household duty, exactly as we light the furnace or rake the lawn. Poor wiring, refuse left in corners, careless disposal of cigars and cigarettes—these are little things in themselves, but they may be the cause of a conflagration.

The American people do not want such a law as the European one cited. And it should not take a law to awaken them to the responsibility which each citizen must accept if we are to control preventable fires.

EXPECTING TOO MUCH

Small town hotels have been the objects of criticism, ridicule and sneers on the part of their guests from time immemorial. But probably most of them are furnishing the best accommodations they can under the circumstances. Travelers who are accustomed to modern conveniences and comforts in larger hotels probably expect too much when they strike a village hostelry. As a reminder of this fact, one country town hotel-keeper placed signs in his rooms which read as follows:

"This ain't the Waldorf-Astoria—If it was it wouldn't be here. You ain't J. P. Morgan—If you was you wouldn't be here. We know this Hotel is on the bum—Well, how about yourself?"

It's safer to guess it is the approaching driver's headlight nearest you that is out.

Appropriately enough, the first annual masters' bridge tournament was played at Deal, N. J.

MORE GOOD WILL TOURS

Good will tours of international significance have been frequent of late, participants ranging from a lone aviator to a large delegation. One of the most notable of these expeditions is the recent visit of more than 200 French commercial figures, members of Parliament and others of prominence, to Norway, Sweden, Poland, and Denmark.

The tour was under the supervision of M. Armand Meggle, the alert director of the national committee for the promotion of France's foreign trade. Last year the Comite National cruised in the Mediterranean at the time of the Algerian centennial celebration. This year the ports of the north of Europe and the Baltic were chosen by the committee with a dual objective—to inform themselves concerning the needs and economic possibilities of the countries visited, and to furnish merchants of those countries information on French industrial activities and details of French export trade.

M. Meggle, the originator of these activities, feels that such contact with leading foreign dealers is one of the most practical methods of meeting the world's economical crisis. These tours, he believes from experience, foster international co-operation, the best means of creating new markets and balancing supply and demand.

The repeated exchange of views and the suggestions of business men are an indispensable and efficacious complement to official negotiations, he believes, and his views were confirmed by the enthusiastic popular and official welcome accorded the delegation in all ports, including Oslo, Copenhagen, Riga, Stockholm and others.

While in Stockholm, members of the cruise met and entertained General de Goys, leader of the "Aces," a fleet of six planes also on a good will tour through the Northern countries.

SAN MATEO COUNTY'S FALL FLOWER FESTIVAL

San Mateo will keep open house for all the communities of the county on October 23, 24 and 25, when the annual San Mateo County Fall Flower Festival will be staged in the gymnasium and grounds of the Junior College. Each town will be represented by a horticultural display of some kind. Large estates, schools and different organizations will vie with one another in an effort to carry away a trophy.

An elaborate parade and pageant, with floats galore, on Saturday afternoon, October 24, will be participated in by the school children and by the different towns of the whole county, with representatives of the American Legion, Boy Scouts and many other civic and patriotic groups in the line of march. Dave McCullough is chairman of the parade. There will be music aplenty, as several of the high school bands of the county will be with the marchers.

All the colorful fall blossoms, including the chrysanthemum, dahlia, rose, carnation, begonia, coleus, and hydrangea, will be there in bewildering array. Fruits and vegetables, cut flowers, potted plants and shrubs will all be accorded a place, according to Martin A. Poss, manager of the show.

Individuals and groups throughout the county are invited to exhibit. Entries must be made by October 20, according to Miss Frances E. Graces, of San Mateo, secretary of the Festival. Bruce S. Gibson is president.

GIFFORD THANKS BUSINESS MEN FOR CO-OPERATION

Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone Company, who was recently chosen by President Hoover to head the organization of Unemployed Relief throughout the country, expresses his thanks to the business leaders of America for their unselfish co-operation, through the columns of Forbes Magazine in its current issue.

"The response has been magnificent," he stated to Mr. Forbes. "Every man in every section of the country who has been requested to serve has gladly agreed to do so. No matter how urgently their own affairs may have demanded their attention, they have expressed ready willingness to devote time and attention to meeting the problems arising from unemployment in their communities and their states. They have exhibited a most worthy spirit of unselfish patriotism."

ELEVEN ESSENTIALS COMPIRE SUCCESSFUL MANAGEMENT

In order to stay in business during the next decade, American corporations and business men must be able to stand the searchlight of eleven essential tests, says W. J. Donald, managing editor of American Management Association, in the current issue of Forbes Magazine.

1. Sound organization of the managing group.
2. Universal adjustment of budgeting.
3. Incentive for executives.
4. Broadening of executives.
5. Unification into merchandising of production, buying and marketing.
6. Drastic improvement of marketing.
7. Adjustment of production costs.
8. Modernization of the financial organization.
9. Economies in office management.
10. Revision of cost systems and overhead.
11. Elimination of inbred viewpoints and adoption of outside points of view.

FIRE IN THE FORESTS

The terrible and destructive fires in the forest areas of many states this year should have focused the public attention on the problem.

Thousands of acres of timber have been devastated—families have been left homeless—human and animal lives have been needlessly destroyed. In at least one state it was necessary to establish martial law in the endangered sections.

Much of the loss is laid to arson—certainly one of the most despicable of all crimes. This we must deal with as best we can through processes of law, and through stricter and more adequate legislation for punishing the offender. But that part of the loss which has resulted from carelessness can only be solved, for our future safety, by the individual. The worker in the woods, the vacationist, the maker of camp-fires, the smoker, each has been responsible, through indifference, carelessness, or ignorance, for millions of dollars damage.

We hear much talk of forest conservation—yet the work of years may be ruined over-night by a single untended camp-fire, a dropped cigar butt. This year the forest fire problem has been especially serious, and it is to be earnestly hoped that out of the unnecessary destruction will come one gain—in a new sense of responsibility on the part of the public that will outlaw forest fires in the years to come.

If some way could be found to tax the racketeers it wouldn't be necessary to levy more than 10 cents a gallon on gasoline.

OFFICERS ARE AFTER RECKLESS DRIVERS

Strict enforcement of laws effecting speed and reckless driving and a general tightening up of all other phases of motor vehicle law enforcement work by state officers is indicated in the recent monthly report of E. Raymond Cato, Chief of the California Highway Patrol, to Daniel J. O'Brien, Director of the Department of Motor Vehicles.

Believed to have been the result of a recent general order requiring stricter enforcement in cases involving major violations, the report shows an increase of 71 per cent in arrests for speed violations, a 44 per cent increase in arrests for reckless driving and a 32 per cent increase in arrests for drunken driving.

"Corresponding increases are noted for light violations, violations of rules of the road, trucks and miscellaneous," says the report.

"The total number of stops increased 67 per cent and the total number of arrests increased 22 per cent over the previous month."

"Our men are hitting the ball," Mr. Cato commented.

Indicative of the activity of the officers, the report shows automobiles operated on patrol work covered 350,742 miles during the month, while motorcycles covered 531,044 miles.

Activities of the Bureau of Lights included the testing of 20,634 vehicles during the month for faulty lights. Of this number, 4,581 were arrested and ordered to adjust their lights.

Tuesday

In fact, Harold slept soundly until he was abruptly awakened by some one kicking the bed. He opened his eyes, and saw standing before him, not Wright, but the other young man, whom Wright had spoken of as Hawkins. This individual, a burly, sulky-looking fellow with an exceedingly evil-tempered expression, was standing at the bedside with a cup and saucer in one hand and a plate in the other. These he put down on the floor with a clatter, and then without a word he turned away and left the room, locking the door after him.

Harold watched him go, and then peered over the edge of the bed to see what he had left. The plate was full of lumps of bread and butter; the cup was a coarse china one and held a quantity of doubtful brown liquid, some of which had stopped over into the saucer. But the general effect was gratifying to Harold, who discovered that he was extraordinarily hungry, which was hardly surprising, seeing that he had last eaten at lunch time yesterday.

After he had finished his breakfast perhaps as much as two hours elapsed before the door opened and Hawkins re-entered. He freed Harold's leg by unlocking the handcuff from the bed-rail, and then he administered a second dexterous kick to the underside of the bed.

"Get up," said Hawkins. Harold obediently rolled off the bed and stood up, found he was giddy, and had to hold on to the bed for support.

"None of that," growled Hawkins, kicking Harold exquisitely on his ankle. "Go on, and down the stairs—slowly."

Harold could do nothing except obey. He walked out of the room and down the stairs which he saw before him, with the loose end of his fetter trailing and clanking behind him.

"In here," said Hawkins, indicating a door to the right. Harold entered and then Hawkins gripped his collar and stopped him.

The room was nearly as bare as the one in which Harold had spent the night. There was a bed, and beside it a table on which stood one or two medicine bottles, while beside them, murderous in its steely-blue efficiency, lay a bulky Mauser, pistol. In the fireplace was a gas-ring connected with a gas terminal, and a poker stood in the corner, and high up over the fireplace a stout spike was driven deep into the wall, but Harold did not notice these at first. His whole attention was instantly taken up by the sight of the occupant of the bed.

This was a huge fleshy man—fleshy even though he was obviously ill—propped up against the pillows and wrapped in a dressing gown, talking to Wright. He wore gold spectacles, but in their benignity they were given the lie by the powerful ruthlessness of the cast of the face. The nose was bulky and unflinching, and although the line of the jaw was hidden by the short beard there was no escaping its fierce determination. The eyes were dark and full of fire, and they showed great animation as their owner went on with his apparently heated argument with Wright. Yet although Harold observed nose and mouth and chin and forehead, he did not draw any conclusions. He hardly noticed Hawkins refettering his free ankle. He was too busy realizing that this was the face of the man he had seen shot on Morley common—the man from whom he had taken Raphael's letters.

"Really, sir," Wright was saying, "he doesn't know any more than a new-born baby. He's not working for anyone—not himself, even."

Bauer replied with an irate dignity, speaking perfect English very rapidly and with only a touch of accent.

"I can form my own conclusions, thank you, Mr. Wright," he said. "That will do."

Bauer removed his gaze from the hapless Wright and turned it with crushing effect upon Harold. The big heavy-lidded eyes burned clear through Harold for a palpitating minute. Then, "Where are King Raphael's letters?" asked Bauer.

Harold could not meet his gaze, but he stood sullenly silent, staring at the floor. Was not this a question of secrecy of the bank's affairs, and was he not an employee of the bank? Bauer glared at him for a space, and then the corners of the thick lips went down in a cruel smile. He made a slight motion with his hand to Hawkins. That gentleman took hold of Harold's little finger and did something excruciatingly painful to it. Harold gave a cry of startled agony, tried to break free, forgot his feet were fettered, and fell with a stunning crash to the floor. Hawkins took him by the ear, applied his boot viciously to the other end of him, and between the two brought him to his feet again, white and shaken. Bauer was still regarding him with unwinking ferocity.

"Where are King Raphael's letters?" asked Bauer, and Hawkins took hold again of Harold's little finger, and prepared to do something extra devilish to the nail. Harold could sense it, in every shrinking nerve, as about to happen. His lips were trembling.

"They're—they're at the bank," he said.

Bauer caressed his little mustache with thick blunt fingers and continued to stare through him impersonally.

"At your bank?"

"Yes."

Harold hesitated, but at a hint of Hawkins taking a firmer grip of his finger the answer shot out of him.

"In the safe."

"Deposited in your name?"

"Yes—oh yes."

"So?" said Bauer. "Then you will write a letter for them to be handed over to bearer. Wright, some paper and a pen."

The materials were ready on the instant, and laid on the table by the bed. Harold took the pen in his manacled hand.

"Write as I dictate," said Bauer. "Your address first. Then—'To the National County Bank, West Central Branch. Dear Sirs, Please deliver—'"

Harold had put the pen down and stood staring at him with eyes brimming with terror.

"I—I can't," he said. "It's no good. They wouldn't give it to you. I indorsed the deposit form 'Only to be delivered to myself in person.'"

Bauer's eyes narrowed a little as he stared at Harold's white twitching face; a sardonic smile passed across Wright's lips.

"That," said Bauer heavily, "is a lie."

"It isn't, really it isn't," persisted Harold wildly, his mind working at lightning speed under the stimuli of pain and fright. "I'll write the order time yesterday."

Harold Slept Soundly Until He Was Abruptly Awakened by Some One Kicking the Bed.

and sign it, honestly I will, but it won't be any good. They'd see something fishy about it at once. And then—Harold's tongue was loose and he babbled on in blank terror, with new vistas of ghastly possibilities opening at every word—"Then they'd call the police and the chap with the order would be arrested, and what would you do to me then?"

Bauer turned to Wright. "You see?" he said. "You were mistaken when you said he was a beginner. Why would he do this in that case?"

"He is a beginner," said Wright, "but—"

Bauer cut short with a gesture any extenuating circumstances Wright might have brought forward. "Hawkins," he said, and waved a thick hand to the fireplace.

Football in America

The first football players in America were the "Oneidas," a football club in Boston, the first organization of its kind in this country and the predecessor of modern college football, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. According to an inscription on a monument in that city the "Oneidas" played all comers from 1862 to 1865, and never tasted defeat nor had their goal line crossed.

American colleges had their football during that period. The first intercollegiate game was played between Princeton and Rutgers on November 6, 1869, the latter having 26 men on the field to the former's 21. But the first real development of the modern game came in 1906 when at a meeting of the American intercollegiate football rules committee the forward pass was introduced.

Beautiful European City

The great charm of Hungary lies in its happy blending of European culture and eastern romance. Budapest, its superb capital, glories in a tradition of more than 1,000 years, but is a modern, imposing, gay and beautiful city with a population of more than 1,000,000. A few hours away picture book scenes of villagers in traditional native costumes and relics of the Mahomedan invasion from the East, centuries ago, appear on every hand.

Peak City

Akron is from a Greek word which means "the summit" or "the peak." The Ohio city is appropriately called Akron because it is on the highest ground in the northern part of the state.

He Knows Old Man River's Every Twist and Turn

IT TAKES a veteran river man to pilot his craft up or down the Mississippi river at any time, and this is especially true when the river is at as a low stage as it is this autumn. Our illustration shows one of the best of the veterans, Capt. George O. Rogers, in the pilot house of the towboat Herbert Hoover, approaching the great Eads bridge. His craft is the largest towboat in the world, is powered with Diesel engines and makes regular trips between St. Louis and New Orleans. Captain Rogers, who is sixty-seven years of age, knows "Old Man River" like a book and can point out every one of its crannies and nooks, some of them dangerous and others safe. He has spent a lifetime learning the Mississippi, but because of its frequent changes of channel his "studies" are never completed. Every trip there may be something new to learn in the way of twists and turns of the mighty stream. Readers of Mark Twain's tales of Mississippi river pilotage will appreciate this.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

OLD MAN COYOTE WARNS PETER

PERHAPS you think that when Old Man Coyote just missed catching Peter Rabbit because Peter managed to reach the old bramble-tangle first he lost his temper. That shows that you don't know Old Man Coyote. If Reddy Fox had been in his place very likely Reddy would have lost his temper and finally gone off in a great rage. Old Man Coyote did nothing of the kind. No sir, he did nothing of the kind. He just spat out the little tuft of white hair which he had pulled out of the middle of Peter's tail, so near to catching Peter had he been, and then peered in through the bramble and grinned at Peter. If he was disappointed, and of course he was, he didn't show it. And as for being angry, why, there wasn't the least trace of a temper.

"Almost got you, Peter, that time," said he breathing very hard, for he had had a long run. "It's lucky for you you've kept your legs oiled up and haven't let them get rusty."

He grinned again, and Peter, panting for breath there in the bramble-tangle, felt almost like grinning back in spite of the fact that he had been so terribly frightened and that he had lost that little bunch of hair right out of the middle of his none too big tail.

"Do you know, Peter, that it's bad business to meddle in the affairs of other folks?" continued Old Man Coyote. "Now tonight you meddled. You warned Honker the Goose through Paddy the Beaver and so cheated me out of a good dinner. People who meddle generally get into trouble. You came pretty near furnishing me with that dinner you cheated me out of, Peter; pretty near. One jump more and I'd have had you. You wouldn't have made me as good a dinner as one of those geese but you would have done very well."

Old Man Coyote licked his chops and Peter had a little shivery, crawly feeling all over.

"And now I am going to give you fair warning, Peter," went on Old Man Coyote, still grinning, "that unless you get me a goose, a fat one, mind you, to make up for the one you cheated me out of you'll never get back to the dear Old Brier Patch. You see I'm giving you fair warning I must have a goose or I will have you. Now don't you wish you hadn't meddled?"

"No," replied Peter bravely enough, though inside his heart sank as he thought of how far away the dear, safe Old Brier Patch was. "I'm glad I did it. If that was meddling it was a good kind of meddling and I'm glad I had the chance and wasn't afraid to. Of course I am sorry if you are hungry but if you would learn to eat grass and clover and bark and berries as I do you never would need to go hungry. But I'm glad, ever so glad, that I saved those geese and I'd do it again if I had the chance. Perhaps it was bad business for me, but it was good business for them and I'm glad I meddled."

"All right, Peter," replied Old Man Coyote as he turned to trot away. "Remember what I said and get me a

One More Heston

Jack Heston, son of the famous Willie Heston who was regarded as the greatest football star ever developed at the University of Michigan, is a sophomore and a halfback at Ann Arbor, and of course he will have a load to carry in the matter of family tradition. His father was all-America selection in 1901-2-3, so Jack will have his work cut out for him. He is expected to play an important part in Michigan's 1931 campaign.

An investigation of many sources of pollution which make many of the finest fresh water streams and lakes unfit for game fish or human beings shows that a great deal of contamination results from the careless fashion in which many tourists and vacationists dispose of refuse.

It seems to be a common practice to use certain forms of rubbish in filling in low places along lakes and streams that are detrimental to fish life and persons who go in bathing. Dried leaves, grass, garbage, of all forms, ashes, sawdust, coal, cinders, log slabs, decayed wood, etc., all decompose at a rapid rate when mixed with water. It is a good rule not to dump garbage nearer than ten rods from any body of fresh water. Whenever possible, pure dirt, sand or gravel should be used in filling in low places in lakes or streams.

The pulmotor, that modern invention which every year saves thousands of persons from death by suffocation, has now traveled from hospital and fire-line into an entirely different element. An apparatus involving the pulmotor idea is annually saving millions of fish from the same fate, according to reports received by officials of the American Game Protective Association.

The restocking of streams and lakes with fish grown in the hatcheries which most states maintain today, has always necessitated shipping them in tanks of water. Even when this was done by truck with the greatest possible speed and over comparatively short distances, they declared, a large percentage of the fish died en route. The rest were often so weakened their growth was slow.

When life-sustaining oxygen had been breathed from the water the fish literally suffocated in their own element. Today several states have installed one of the newest things in conservation equipment to prevent loss, reports reveal. This is a truck provided with an oxygen-feed similar to that of a pulmotor. The apparatus sends oxygen into the tanks as fast as the fish breathe it from the water. The supply is controlled by the driver in accordance with the number of fish, their size and even the species.

With two such trucks the Idaho game and fish department distributed 11,000,000 fingerling trout this year with almost no loss, officials of the Association learned.

"PRECEDENT," NEW YORK HIT COMES TO THE CURRAN

"Precedent," I. J. Golden's thrilling play, with a record run of a season in New York to back it as a fine drama, comes to the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, for an engagement of two weeks, beginning Monday, October 12.

Robert Warwick, who has been starred throughout America, and whose recent stage vehicles were "The Night Watch," in which he co-starred with the late Jeanne Eagles, "To Love," "A Woman's Virtue," "Drifting," "Nice Women," and "The Royal Bed," heads a large and distinguished cast of players which includes John Ince, Leon Waycott, Mary Alden, Edna Bennett, Howard Nugent, Carlton King, Haleene Hill, Harold Nelson, Arthur Foster, Wilbur Higby and many others.

"Precedent" is rated by New York critics as the best drama offered this season. Its first production was at the Provincetown Theatre, New York. It became a hit over night and had to be moved to a larger theatre, where capacity audiences greeted every performance. Dick Morgan, the noted producer, saw it and made immediate arrangements for its showing in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

"Precedent" is in a prologue, eight scenes and an epilogue. There are twenty-two characters in the play—a remarkably large company—with a production that is lavish and perfect in every detail. The producer has also introduced many novel features of stagecraft. This had to be done in order to cope with the swift action of the play.

"Precedent" concerns itself with a baffling social problem, said to be based on an actual case. The author with deftness and precision has woven a tale of unusual interest that grips the audience and holds it spellbound until the final curtain.

DR. A. H. GIANNINI TO HEAD BANK'S EXECUTIVE BOARD

The election of Dr. A. H. Giannini, who is to retire as chairman of the board of the Bank of America N. A. of New York, to the chairmanship of the executive committee of the Bank of America N. T. & S. A. of California, is announced. Dr. Giannini will assume the duties of his new office in the near future.

Arnold J. Mount, president of the bank, in announcing Dr. Giannini's appointment, stated he was happy to see him rejoin the institution of which he was first a member in 1908. Mr. Mount stated that the wide acquaintance of Dr. Giannini, both in Northern and Southern California, as well as his close relations with banking interests throughout the country, make him a logical choice as chairman of the bank's executive committee. Mr. Mount recalled the prominent part Dr. Giannini has played in the financing of the motion picture industry.

"As a native of Santa Clara county and as a resident of California for many years," Mr. Mount said, "Dr. Giannini brings to the bank not only a broad and intimate acquaintance with people and conditions in this state, but the advantage also of the national contacts and relationships formed by him as head of the directorate of the Bank of America N. A., New York. We are happy to welcome him again to our organization."

Dr. Giannini was born in 1874, graduated from St. Ignatius College, San Francisco, in 1894, and received a medical degree from the University of California in 1896. He married Miss Leontine Denker, a member of a pioneer Los Angeles family, and for a time practiced his profession in California, becoming the president of the San Francisco County Medical Society and serving as a surgeon in the Spanish-American war. He also served two terms as a member of the board of supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, beginning about 1907. Dr. Giannini entered the service of the Bank of Italy in 1908, and was influential in effecting the inauguration of children's savings accounts in the public schools of California. He served as a vice-president of that bank, first in charge of the

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.
This is indeed a most curious world, made more curious by some curious people who populate it.

We are mildly surprised that many curious people give public expression as to their ignorance about what is best for the welfare of the country and its war veterans.

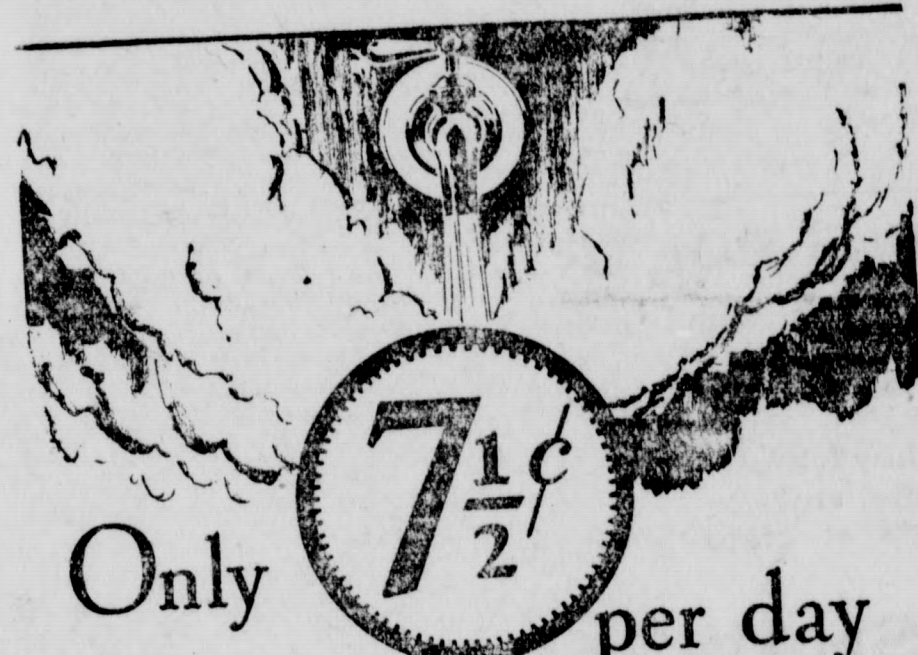

The World war brought new problems for surgery and medicine. It maimed men in a way which was new to the profession of healing—poison gas, shell shock, many mental diseases came in its train, and today we have thousands of ex-service men whose lives are a living hell. There are many who contracted diseases and other disabilities on account of war service, who will suffer from their war service for the balance of their lives.

To give to them is not charity. They have a very pronounced right to be kept as comfortable as human means can make them. Their claims upon us are backed by all the laws of right and justice. Furthermore, it is not only a duty, but a supreme privilege to serve them.

In the Army and Navy were a collection of men, hastily gathered together, hastily trained by the too few regular Army and Navy men and National Guard, who did their duty and fought as men inspired by the single idea of protecting their home and country. As soon as the war was over they hurried back to civil life and did their best to forget the grim days of war, except the warm and shining spirit of comradeship.

It is a strange thing, but it seems that the soldier is adored in war but neglected and shunned by a lot of people in times of peace.

INTERESTING SERVICE AT THE M. E. CHURCH

"The Challenge of Christ to the Capitalist" is the sermon topic for the Sunday service to be held in the Daly City Methodist church, October 11, at 8 P. M.

The church shakes one hand, doubled into a fist, in the face of the rich man, crying, "It is hard for the rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven;" while at the same time she holds out the other hand to receive whatever donation this same man may be prevailed upon to give toward her support and program. The modern church must have money. But to accept the money and at the same time condemn the man who gives it would seem inconsistent. Apparently the rich man has a permanent if not an essential place in modern civilization. And we can not prevent the many words of condemnation by Jesus from flooding our minds. Yet experience shows that most men would willingly exchange places with the condemned rich man and take their chances. Does this mean that men do not take Jesus and His message seriously, or that His message to the modern rich man is not one of condemnation?

There are some things that money can not buy. There are some vacancies in the lives of all of us that money can not fill. Many a rich man feels in his own heart that he is more an object of pity than of covetousness. He would gladly give up his wealth for some things possessed by the very poor who live in envy all about him. What has Christ to offer the modern rich man?
